Mood and Depression Fast

- Depression is a medical condition that can make you feel and act differently than you normally do. If you feel sad, angry, and irritable, lose interest in activities you usually enjoy, feel hopeless, worthless, have trouble sleeping or sleep too much, lose energy or feel tired all the time, have difficulty concentrating, remembering, or making decisions, you could have depression.
- There are many types of treatments available and your health care provider will help you choose the best treatment for you, including taking prescription medications and receiving counseling.
- Prescription medications can often help you recover from depression more quickly, and some people begin to feel better within the first few weeks of treatment; however, everyone reacts differently to medication, so it may take time to find out what medication works best for you.
- Though medicines prescribed by your health care provider or mental health provider can have side effects, do not stop medicines without first checking with your medical or mental health provider. Stopping medicines abruptly can cause withdrawal symptoms. Some side effects go away after you have been taking the medicine for a few weeks, and some may not go away. If the side effects bother you, talk with your health care provider.
- It's best to avoid combining medications for depression and alcohol. It may worsen your symptoms, and in some cases it can be dangerous. Your thinking and alertness may be impaired and it will affect your coordination, judgment and reaction time (motor skills) more than alcohol alone. Some combinations may make you sleepy. This can impair your ability to drive or do other tasks that require focus and attention.

What can you do?

- There are things you can do to help yourself feel better. Even if you don't feel like doing much, consider trying exercise or spend time with family or other loved ones.
- Keep to a regular sleep schedule.
- Avoid alcohol, and eating nutritious and balanced meals.
- Be open and honest with your health care provider about your feelings and symptoms. Work with your health care provider to choose the best treatment for you!
